Improving the health of their communities is at the heart of every hospital’s mission. America’s 340B hospitals have increased access to care for many of their most vulnerable patients, while also giving back to their communities.

340B requires drug companies participating in Medicaid to discount prescription drugs sold to hospitals that care for many low-income and uninsured patients.

340B is a small program that costs the government nothing — but makes a big difference to patients.

All hospitals provide a full range of benefits to their communities. And 340B hospitals provide more than $50 billion in benefits to their local communities.

340B has worked for over twenty-five years. Congress should put patients first and protect 340B.
